Practice mixed conditional forms with exercises: First and second conditionals - respond to situations with first or second conditionals Second and third conditionals - rewrite sentences or choose from a multiple choice test Mixed conditionals combine second and third conditionals in specific ways, such as: Type 1: If he had left immediately, he would be here now. If I had studied hard when I was young, I wouldn't be a porter now. We use the past perfect in the if-clause to speculate about the past situations and the present conditional in the main clause. Type 2: If you weren't lazy, you would have got the job. If we were Simon's parents, we would not have let him leave the school. We use the past simple in the if-clause to speculate about the present or future situations and the perfect conditional in the main clause. If he had booked the hotel room, then he would be camping now. This form is less common, used mainly in formal writing. Note that "if" is often the most frequent expression used in if clauses, but other expressions can also be employed. I'd be here tonight even if you hadn't invited me. Without Mrs. Jones having gone to Paris, we wouldn't have this lecture. Similarly, I wouldn't be hungry now unless you had made dinner.
